AN ANNUAL REVIEW

FOREWORD

DR. E. F. WILLOUGHBY

B.A., D.Paed.

Principal

ALTHOUGH School Spirit, the theme of this issue of our "Kelvin Year Book," is intangible and, therefore difficult to define, it is nevertheless a very precious possession of any student. School Spirit includes not only enthusiastic support of school activities, good sportsmanship, co-operation, loyalty, and pride in the school and its traditions, but also such basic and very important things as courtesy and proper behaviour.

Yes, there is much more to School Spirit than turning out to cheer school teams, singing the School Song, or loudly shouting the School Yell. There is, above all, the willingness to give one's best to both the curricular and extra-curricular activities and to place the good name and welfare of the school before all selfish interests.

Such a Spirit pervaded the life of the late Gerald Riddell, a graduate of Kelvin in 1925 and Canada's permanent representative to the United Nations. Gerald was School President, winner of the Governor-General's Medal, and was largely responsible for Kelvin's first real Year Book. His recent untimely death cut short his splendid record of service to his country and mankind through the U. N. O. His adult life reflected the fine sense of values and Spirit which he showed in his years at Kelvin.

In this sense, then, School Spirit is the forerunner of that kindred Spirit of Service which characterizes the good citizen of any democratic community.

SCHOOL SPIRIT

AS THE CHERRY-AND-GREY sweater breaks away from the clutching defenders and gallops the few remaining yards to the goal line, you and all the Kelvin supporters rise as one person and cheer yourselves hoarse. But why do you do this? It is simply your way of saying that you think that Kelvin is the best school in the city. The cherry-and-grey-clad player is trying to prove this and you are voicing your approval.

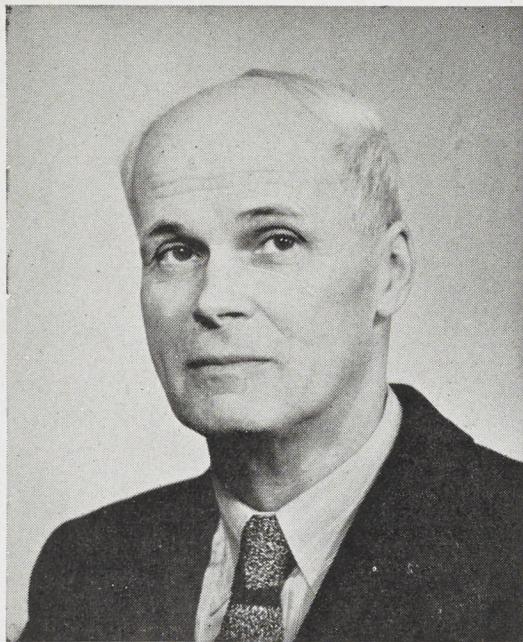

You show your approval in a hundred other ways. Although your natural tendency is to say you don't, you will probably argue heatedly that the brightest kids come from Kelvin. And do you notice how avidly you read anything that has to do with Kelvin? You just naturally have a good time at all the school dances because Kelvin dances are always best. At the basketball game, your attention is caught by the Kelvin player putting everything he has into the game.

Many of these things are taken for granted or pass unnoticed. But they all show your feelings for your school. And while your radiant glow at graduation may be partly your joy at not having to return to school, in years hence you will remember Kelvin.

Someday you will return to your old school for a visit and, while walking up the steps, you will proudly say to yourself, "I'm glad that I went to Kelvin. It's the finest school anywhere."

MISS GWYNNE

SECRETARIAL STAFF

Miss Esther Gwynne is secretary to Dr. Willoughby and Mr. Fyles. She is in charge of the office work which includes acting as a receptionist.

Miss Bernice Anderson is assistant secretary to the principals and to the staff. Her duties include typing daily notices, mimeographing, and entering marks.

MISS ANDERSON

MAINTENANCE STAFF

ALTHOUGH most Kelvinites never realize it, our school is one of the best maintained in the city. For this efficiency and devotion to duty, the teachers and students of our institution are deeply grateful to the Building Staff, pictured above, as follows: Back Row: G. F. Forscutt, G. A. Anderson, D. Turk. Front Row: J. Spencer, J. Kerr, W. Swivick.

Best Wishes To . . .

THE NEW Vice-Principal of Lord Roberts School is Kelvin's former boys' guidance counsellor, Mr. R. T. F. Thompson. We extend to Mr. Thompson our best wishes for success and happiness in his new work.

Miss O'Donnell, who was with the Home Economics Department of Kelvin last year, has joined the staff of Earl Grey School.

Miss Martin, a member of the Kelvin faculty for only one year, has moved across the river to Gordon Bell High School, where she is now teaching Commercial Course subjects.

We hope that Miss Sprung, who has taken a year's leave-of-absence, is enjoying her trip through eastern Canada and the United States.

Miss Forsythe, who last year taught textiles and clothing to Kelvin's Home Economics students, has left Kelvin to take up similar duties at William Whyte School.

During the year, several changes have taken place in Kelvin's building staff. Mr. Philip and Mr. Porter of the Maintenance staff left after Christmas for the new Technical school, as did Mr. Tooke, a member of our engineering staff. Norquay School has acquired the services of Mr. Turk, another member of Kelvin's maintenance staff.

Congratulations To Our Leading Students Of 1950-1951

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S MEDAL, the highest honor obtainable in Kelvin, is awarded on the basis of 50% for scholastic standing, 25% for qualities of leadership, and 25% for participation in athletics. Last year's winner was Roy Vincent. Roy was editor-in-chief of the Yearbook during 1949-50 and was assistant editor during 1948-49. In addition to that he achieved a 91% average. He was also a member of the inter-high skating and soccer teams and participated in inter-class basketball.

Each year the boy and girl in level II who have the highest scholastic standing on the final examinations receive the Dux Scholarship Award. Last year Joan Cohen and Leonard Peikoff were presented this award with averages of 91% and 93% respectively.

The Dux Citizenship Award is given to the boy and girl who because of their participation in school activities are considered the most likely to make good citizens. The winners of this award for 1949-50 were Lynn Honeyman and Richard Allden. Last year Lynn was on the year book editorial staff and the opera production staff. She was also a cheerleader and a member of the inter-high and inter-class basketball and volleyball teams. Richard was class vice-president and was a member on the inter-high basketball, skating, and soccer teams. In addition to that, he played inter-class basketball, hockey and soccer. He was also a member of Eaton's Junior Executive.

Down: Roy Vincent, Lynn Honeyman, Richard Allden, Joan Cohen, Leonard Peikoff.

SCHOOL SONGS

*Kelvin's portals ever glorious,
All through life shall stay with me;
Never shall her theme victorious
Fade from out my memory.
Courage, right, love of truth,
Always these my guide shall be;
'Till age crowning happy youth,
Life shall end her walk with me.*

P. G. PADWICK Words by DON MACKAY

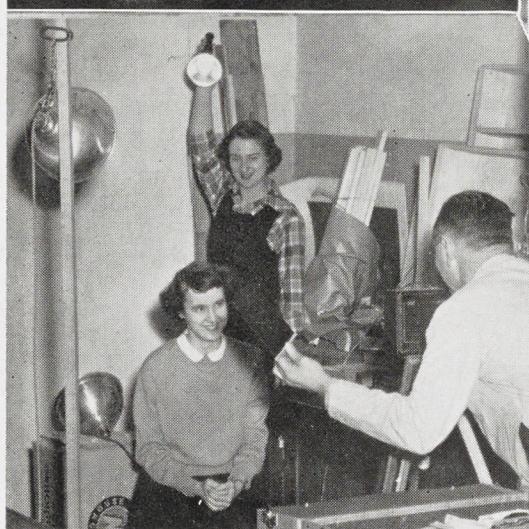

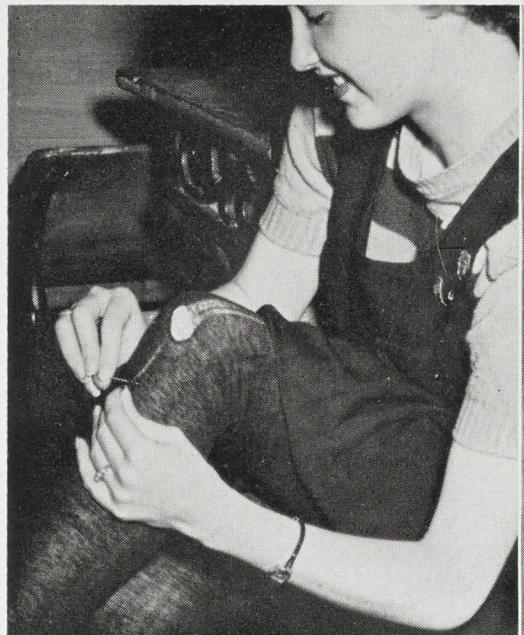

*K.T.H.S., K.T.H.S., Oh, we love you so,
There's no other place like you.
You're the fairest, you're the rarest place in all the world,
You inspire us through and through.
K.T.H.S., K.T.H.S., we'll remember you;
We'll remember our friends ever true.
Here's to boys and girls and teachers,
Here's to everyone — K.T.H.S., here's to you.*

Words by P. G. PADWICK

*When Kelvin marches down the field
Then we know our team will never yield,
For though the other schools have lots of pep,
When they meet our boys they'll know they're out of step,
And when this game goes down in history,
It's just another Kelvin victory.
Then our cheers go up for dear old Kelvin, —
Rah! Rah! Rah!*

COUNCIL

The 1950-51 Kelvin School Council enjoyed considerable success in its various enterprises throughout the school year. Seldom appearing in the spotlight, the Council provided much of the behind-the-scenes organization for our school activities.

Perhaps the most notable of these activities was the third Careers Day. Under the direction of the Ethics committee, speakers were invited to Kelvin and over sixty talks were given on different vocations and professions. Other events which owe some part or all of their success to the work of the Council include the opera parties, the school dances, and the Kelvin Theatre Night.

This year the Council introduced into Kelvin a student suggestion box through which the students could register their opinions or ideas on school affairs. The Kelvin Debating Club was another contribution of the 1950-51 Council, as was the Kelvin Golf Tournament. Late in the year, the idea of a school paper was brought up but plans did not develop quickly enough to make a publication feasible.

Finally, to lay a solid foundation for the future, the Council amended the Constitution so that next year the Vice-President will be elected by the whole student body in a system similar to that now used in electing the President.

WORK on the thirty-first edition of the "Kelvin Year Book," began last fall with the appointment of John Kennedy as editor-in-chief. Vivian Schwartz, a member of last year's staff, became associate editor with Nancy Anne Holland and Dave Brown taking over the important posts of assistant editors. Esther Israels and Noel Brock Smith were appointed co-chairmen of the biography board which prepared the copy for the graduate section. The job of music editor went to Ron Kinney, while Gail Dodds, as literary editor, began the long hard work on that section. Pat Ellis took charge of the art work in the book. The sports articles were written under the very capable direction of sports editors Martin Hollenberg and Ivy Little.

On the financial side of the book, Guy Kroft became business manager, while Pete Macdonald took charge of circulation. To complete the staff, Tom Little took over the helm of the advertising department.

YEAR BOOK STAFF 1951

FOR THE PAST two years, the theme of the "Kelvin Year Book" has dealt with anniversaries, and this year the staff felt that they should try something new. Accordingly, school spirit was chosen as the theme and around it the book was planned.

However, the staff almost immediately ran into a knotty problem. How were they to put out a book of the same high quality as that of last year's prizewinner in the face of increased production costs? As a partial solution to this problem, advertising rates were increased slightly and, at the same time, the price of the book was raised to one dollar. However, these steps alone were not enough, and so you will find that this year's book, although it retains the same coverage of events, is somewhat smaller than the previous one.

With this obstacle out of the way, the staff continued work on the book. Endless hours of effort were spent in the preparation of art work and copy, the taking of photographs, and the meetings with the printer and the engraver. Many hours also went into the soliciting of the advertisements which make the book possible. And now, the work of this year's staff has come to a close.

Here then, for your judgment, is presented the product of the year's work. We of the staff sincerely hope that this year's edition of the "Kelvin Year Book" meets with your approval and that you will treasure it through the years for the many happy memories it will provide of your year at Kelvin.

AS USUAL, the biggest musical event of the year was the production of the school operetta, this year Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers." Originally scheduled to run for four nights, February 13-16, the last performance was cancelled when falling plaster from the roof of the Playhouse Theatre threatened the safety of the audience. The fact that the first three performances were so successful only helped to increase the disappointment of those holding tickets for the final night. Congratulations go out to Mr. Hoole, Miss Anderson, Miss Suttie, the cast, the dancers, and all members of the staff and student body who helped to make the operetta the successful production that it was.

A girls' choir sang suitable hymns at the Remembrance Day ceremony to help greatly in creating the solemn atmosphere of the occasion.

On Sunday, December 10, Kelvin presented her ninth annual Christmas carol service to a capacity audience in the Crescent Fort Rouge Church. Such beautiful carols as "There Rose a Spray to Glory" and "Carol of the Bells" made the service an outstanding success. Part of the choir gave a repeat performance on the following Wednesday when they sang at the Royal Alexandra Hotel for the Winnipeg Rotary Club.

A girls' ensemble from Kelvin won the Junior Vocal Ensemble (unconducted) in the Manitoba Musical Festival while the Kelvin Glee Club won the J. S. Little trophy and the Honourable James Cox Aiken's shield. In doing so, the girls received the top marks of the festival, 92 and 94, in what the adjudicator said was "a magnificent performance; really fine and distinguished choral work for any choir."

A choir selected to sing at the Graduation Exercises is expected to add to the ceremonies by their fine singing.

The school orchestra, festival winners last year, gave no performances this year. Practices were held twice a week under the direction of Mr. Buss and the supervision of Mr. Palmer.

Several informative debates were given on topics ranging from the "Crisis in Korea" to "Going steady." These debates and meetings were open to all those interested in the club and its activities.

Executive for 1950-51 was B. Ireland, president; V. Schwartz, secretary; and E. Brandt, publicity director.

COLLEGIATE REPORTER

COLLEGIATE REPORTER is a weekly programme begun this year by radio station CKY to present the week's happenings from the corners and corridors of Winnipeg High Schools. Besides reports from each of the schools, there is a summary of boys' sports, girls' sports, women's features, and special events, along with talent from one of the schools. Kelvin's representatives were Pete Dafoe (Boys' Sports), Dianne Jackman (Kelvin Reporter), and Hugh Clifford (Special Events).

INTER - HIGH SOCCER

KELVIN SOCCER TEAMS did not fare too well in league play this year, both losing all but one of their games.

The junior team improved as the season progressed and provided stiff competition for the other teams in the league. Led by captain Gordon Dibley and halfback Bob Schick, the juniors succeeded in trouncing Gordon Bell 6-3 in the final game of the season.

The seniors, coached and manager by Dr. Robinson, and led by the fine play of captain Murray Banks, met with much the same luck as the juniors. Losing their first two games, the seniors came back to overpower an undermanned Isaac Newton eleven by a 5-2 score.

Clippers Are Strong Contenders . . .

GORDON BELL: Taking advantage of the breaks, Kelvin downed a Gordon squad 17-6. James' run after a G.B. fumble and Gigliotti's sixty-five yard run after a pass-interception gave Kelvin an early lead. Culchesky's pass to Maxwell in the third quarter made it 17-0 before Gordon scored in the last few minutes. James, Mazur, and team captain Bob Hooper turned in a good game for Kelvin.

ISAAC NEWTON: The Clipper line played a standout game as Kelvin scuttled Newton 17-0 to keep their record clean. James' touchdown and Culchesky's pass to Rowan gave Kelvin a 10-0 first quarter lead. After James' long third-quarter run, Gigliotti scored on a fake on-side kick. Mitchell rouged Konyk for Kelvin's final point.

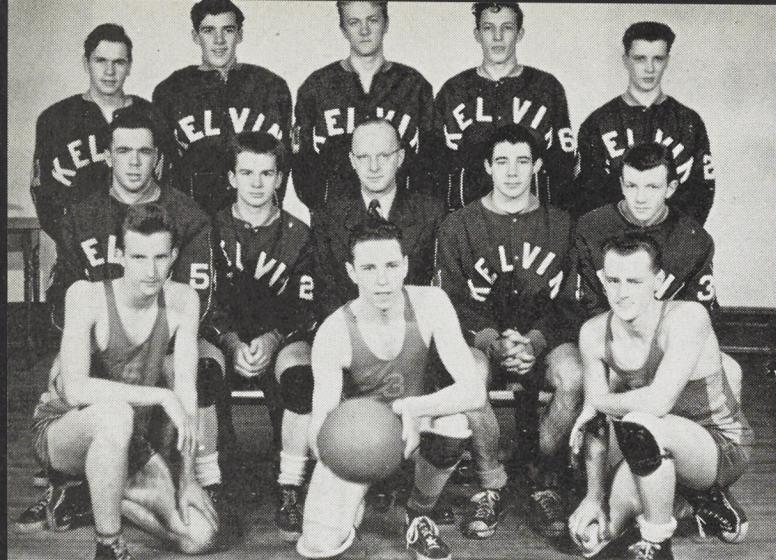

DANIEL McINTYRE: Using their downfield blocking to perfection, Daniel tripped the Katies 28-11. Kelvin took two early leads on touchdowns by McQuitty and Conner but Daniel tied it up and it was 11-11 at the half. In the third quarter, the roof fell in as Daniel scored three uncontested touchdowns. The Katies tried to roll in the final quarter but were stifled by a solid Daniel defence.

ST. JOHN'S: Gigliotti's attempted field goal made it 1-0. Then James took a handoff from Culchesky and bulled his way seventy-two yards to paydirt. In the final half, Tech went ahead 8-6 but James gathered in Culchesky's pass to tuck away the game. James, Mann, McQuitty, and Culchesky went well in the backfield while up front it was Wallace, Mazur, and Watson.

ST. JOHN'S: After James hauled the ball down the field, Mann raced over for the major. In the final half, the Tigers scored on a kick to the deadline and a converted touchdown, and then staved off a determined Kelvin bid to win 7-5. Kelvin's line stalwarts were Wallace, O'Hara, and Watson while James carried the backfield with help from Mann.

DANIEL McINTYRE: Showing marked superiority in all departments, the Maroon and White rolled over the Clippers by a 35-0 score. James and Gigliotti were best for the Cherry and Grey.

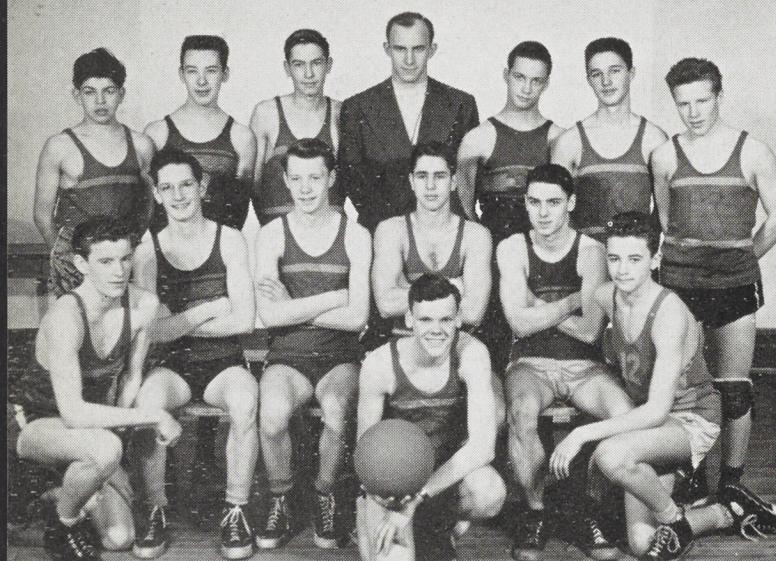

Two outstanding Kelvin players, Bob Watson and Gerry James, placed on the post-season all-star teams of both Winnipeg papers.

Successful Winter Sports' Season

Skiing

AT THE INTER-HIGH ski-and-snowshoe meet held at the Puffin Ski Club on February 17, the Kelvin entry, organized by Miss Suttie and Dr. McCullough, fought to a second place tie with Daniel McIntyre, both being defeated by Norwood Collegiate. The boys, while capturing a third place in the cross-country, were outskied by the girls, who picked up the remainder of Kelvin's points.

Skating

KELVIN was successful in the 1951 skating races, tying for first place with Daniel McIntyre. Under the coaching of Mr. J. LeNeveu, the boys captured second and third place in the relay event, the A team taking the second spot, the B team the third. In the individual event, Pat Coinner skated away fifth first place, while Bob Cross placed third in his event.

Curling

HIGH on the list of Kelvin achievements for 1950-51 was the winning by the McEachern rink of the W. A. McIntyre trophy, a new award emblematic of the inter-school city and suburban curling championship. This foursome, Norm McEachern, Ed Herba, Jim Hamilton, and Ian Clark defeated a West Kildonan rink in the final to keep their unbeaten record intact and bring the trophy to Kelvin.

Kelvinites Enter Many Sports . . .

Soccer

THIS YEAR, inter-room soccer saw teams from many rooms competing for top honors. At the end of the schedule, Room 40 and Room 41 had captured the championships of their respective divisions. In a thrilling final, Bill Mills rammed home the winning goal as Room 40 edged Room 41 by a 1-0 score.

Basketball

TWENTY-SIX TEAMS were entered in the inter-room basketball league this year. A powerful Room 41A team captured the Grade XI-XII honors by defeating Room 28-38 in a close game. In the final, The Room 41 boys overpowered a Room 35 quintet, winners of the Grade X section, by a 58-9 score.

Curling

EVERY FRIDAY after four, several dozen members of the Kelvin Curling Club enjoyed an hour or two of curling in a league organized by Mr. Borland. Congratulations are extended to Doug Brown's rink, league winners, and to Tom Little's quartet, which finished in the runner-up spot.

Skiing

THE KELVIN SKI CLUB, despite record membership, had a poor season because of bad snow conditions. However, hopes are held for better co-operation from the weather next year. This year's officers were: Don Murray (Pres.), Claudia Shepard (Vice-Pres.), Lorraine Fiset (Sec.), Pat Webb (Treas.).

KELVIN girls skated off with a first-place tie with Daniel McIntyre in the speed-skating races held at the Amphitheatre on the evening of February 8. Two teams were entered in the relay event. Both qualified for the final in which the A team took the second spot, followed closely by the B team with third place. In the individual events, two girls were entered with Shirley Kreger capturing a third place. The practices were held at the Crescentwood Rink and were handled by Pat Coinner, the girls' coach.

Skiing

AT THE ANNUAL ski meet sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Kelvin girls gave a fine exhibition to boost Kelvin into second place. Tops for Kelvin was Lorraine Fiset's outstanding performance in which she captured first place in both the girls' open slalom and the Grade X cross-country. In the Grade XI cross-country, Claudia Shepard managed to place second. The girls' slalom team picked up another first place when they posted the fastest time in the senior girls' slalom event.

The Girls Enjoy Sports Too . . .

Volleyball

INTER-CLASS VOLLEYBALL was a great success this year with every room turning out. The schedule was run off smoothly under the direction of Miss Suttie.

In the Grade XI-XII circuit, Room 25 took top honours, while Room 22 walked off with the Grade X championship. In a sudden-death game for the school championship, Room 22 defeated Room 25 by the narrow score of 40-35.

Bowling

A MAJORITY of rooms were well represented in the second girls' bowling league which was organized this year under the guidance of Miss Suttie.

Although the bowlers ranged from beginners to those with a professional touch, the competition was keen and all who participated had a great deal of enjoyment. Rooms 18 and 38 battled it out in the roll-off with Room 38 coming out on top to cop the championship.

Basketball

THERE WAS strong rivalry in the girls' inter-class basketball league as many enthusiastic teams battled for first place. At the end of the schedule, Room 22 had won the Grade X division while Room 18 had taken top honours in the Grade XI-XII division. In a close game, Room 18 defeated Room 22 by a score of 15-10 to win the championship.

THE LITTLE LOST SOUL

By VERA VAN IDERSTINE

THE HEADLINES blared out the news and the paper-boys shouted it on their street corners. "YOUNG DOCTOR MIRACULOUSLY SAVES LIFE OF SPASTIC CHILD! CHILD BELIEVED DEAD REVIVED BY YOUNG PHYSICIAN! SPASTIC CHILD RECOVERS SLOWLY AFTER BEING NEAR DEATH'S DOOR!"

Up in the Celestial City, St. Peter paused a moment in his endless task of admitting souls through the gates of Paradise. He bent his celestial ear earthward and listened to the earthly cries of the newsboys. Nodding his wise old head in a saintly manner, he returned to his task again. How the last hundred years had flown! In all his years in eternity, St. Peter had admitted only one discontented soul through the gates of heaven. He was such a little fellow. The Angel of Death had been rushed with calls that day, and so had sent him on alone. He marched all by himself very bravely up to St. Peter and asked to be admitted.

"Your name?" asked the saintly voice.

"Gus," came the awed reply.

"Full name, please," said the heavenly gatekeeper. "I can't admit you until I know the full particulars."

"Gus," repeated the little soul.

"Yes, but what's your last name?"

"Don't know, and I got lost!" whereupon the little lost soul did a most unheavenly thing and burst into tears.

"Now, now, Gus," said St. Peter in a very pious voice. "You don't cry in heaven. Everyone here is happy."

"But I can't get into heaven. I don't know my name and I'm lost!" wailed the infant.

"Well," said the saint, "the Angel of Death has certainly been very careless not getting your full name, but I'll give you a title instead." He dipped his heavenly pen into the heavenly ink, and wrote with a very heavenly hand in the Book of Eternity.—"Gus, The Little Lost Soul"—and Gus entered the heavenly gates.

Now everyone in heaven knew that Gus was a little lost soul because he didn't know his full name, and everyone treated him even more kindly than usual, if that's possible in heaven. But Gus was not truly happy. Everyone in heaven knew his full name and what he had done on earth, and although in heaven the souls and angels thought only heavenly thoughts, everyone knew just the same, who he had been on earth. That is, everyone except poor little Gus.

We all know that everyone on earth has a guardian angel. Well, when you get to heaven you find that all the angels are so busy being guardians of the earth, that there aren't any left for the heavenly dwellers of the Celestial City. It would never do not to have any guardian though, and so in heaven, every angel and every soul has a guardian cloud. Gus had a very nice guardian cloud called Theopolis. This was a big name for such a little soul, and being very absent-minded as well as very little, Gus could never remember any more than Theo. So that was what Theopolis was called.

Theo was very good to the poor little lost soul, and Gus would sit by the heavenly hours listening to the very heavenly stories about the very heavenly saints. But if Theo asked Gus about earthly matters, all Gus could say was, "My name's Gus, and I got lost on the way here. Now I'm so muddled I can't remember about the earth." And Theo would nod his fluffy head, very dignified and wise about the matter, which was really quite clever considering that he was just a cloud.

Gus would often say, with an attempt at a heavenly sigh, "Oh, if only I could go back to earth again. Then

I wouldn't be a lost soul because I'd have a full name, and I wouldn't be the only discontented soul in Paradise." He said this so very often that even Theo began to think the same. Finally one celestial afternoon Theo told Gus to go and see the Contented Angel. Perhaps she could help the poor little lost soul. So picking up his golden harp, which he never played, and his golden halo, which was a size too large because he was absolutely the littlest lost soul in heaven, Gus went to see the Contented Angel.

The Angel of Content lived on Reverence Road. Gus marched up to the very celestial mansion, and knocked on the very celestial door. "Come in," said the very contented voice of the very Contented Angel.

"My name's Gus and I'm discontented in heaven. I'm the only lost soul here and I'm looking for an earthly body so St. Peter can register my full name in the Book of Eternity."

"Are you sure that will make you contented?" asked the very contented voice of the very Contented Angel.

"Yes," said Gus, very sure of himself.

"Perhaps you should speak to the Angel of Joy. Maybe she can help you."

So the little lost soul marched up Heavenly Hill to the heavenly home of the Joyous Angel, and knocked on the door. "Come in," said the joyous voice of the Joyous Angel.

"My name's Gus and I'm unhappy in heaven. I'm the only lost soul here and I'm looking for an earthly body so St. Peter can register my full name in the Book of Eternity."

"Are you sure that will make you happy?" asked the joyous voice of the Joyous Angel.

"Yes," said Gus, very sure of himself.

"Perhaps you should speak to the Angel of Life. Maybe she can help you."

So the little lost soul marched down Heavenly Hill to Piety Park where the Angel of Life dwelt. He knocked on the door. "Come in," said the lively voice of the liveliest angel.

"My name's Gus and I'm discontented in heaven. I'm the only lost soul here and I'm looking for an earthly body so St. Peter can register my full name in the Book of Eternity."

"Well," said the angel, "there are many children beginning life on earth, but my list of souls for them is quite complete. I could put your name at the bottom but that means you will have to wait at least a couple of thousand heavenly years."

"Oh my!" said Gus, "I guess I'll just never find a body for my soul," and he couldn't help letting a very unheavenly tear trickle down his cheek.

"Now don't fret," said the Angel of Life. "Your trouble all began with that careless Angel of Death, so I'm sure he could help you. He just lives a halo's throw from here."

So the little lost soul went to see the Angel of Death, and told him of his sad plight.

"Dear, dear," said the forgetful Angel of Death. "Did I cause you all that trouble? I don't think I can correct it, but I can take you on my journey to earth with me. Would you like to come?"

"Oh yes," said Gus, "I certainly would!"

"I'll be leaving very soon. Oh dear, where did I put my black shroud?"

"You have it in your hand."

"Oh dear, so I have! You're a very helpful little soul. Now let me see. . . . I have to check my list. Oh yes, here is our first stop. Come along little Gus. We shall have to hustle. Mr. John C. Strathmore, Junior, is due to pass away at three o'clock sharp, and we mustn't keep his soul waiting or he might get a bad opinion of heaven, and that would never do."

Gus went so many places with the angel that he was really getting quite tired of answering the same question over and over. All the souls would ask him who he was and he would say, "I'm a little lost soul looking for an earthly body so St. Peter can enter my full name in the Book of Eternity." But all the souls would shake their heads and say that their former bodies had been much too large or much too clever for such a little soul. Poor Gus would blink back his tears each time. Oh well, even if he found an earthly body, he wasn't quite sure how he would go about using it anyway.

"Well," said the Angel of Death, "it's been a long day's work. We have just one more call to make and we can go home to the Celestial City. Then St. Peter can finish admitting these souls into heaven."

The angel entered a big impressive building. He told Gus it was a hospital. Now Gus didn't quite know what a hospital was, for he was just a very little soul, but it certainly was impressive. They went down a long corridor into a brightly lit room where several earthly beings were gathered around a small child.

"You're right on time," said the child's soul coming forward to meet the Angel of Death. "I can hardly wait to begin my heavenly journey to the heavenly gates."

"Oh, look," cried Gus, "Here it is! Here's the earthly body I want."

The child's soul replied, "But that body is twisted and crippled. I was a spastic child but now my arms and legs are freed and I can walk! You wouldn't want such an earthly body as this!"

"But if I could only enter it, I could make it well, and I would live such a good life even the littlest guardian cloud in Paradise would know my full name and I'd never be discontented or unhappy again."

"You have been a good little soul in the eyes of everyone in Paradise, and I grant you temporary release from the Sands of Eternity."

The Angel of Death dropped to his knees and bowed his head for he knew the voice that had spoken was that of the Master. When he raised his eyes and looked around again, little Gus was gone!

The headlines blared out the news, and the paper-boys shouted it on their street corners. "YOUNG DOCTOR MIRACULOUSLY SAVES LIFE OF SPASTIC CHILD! CHILD BELIEVED DEAD REVIVED BY YOUNG PHYSICIAN! SPASTIC CHILD RECOVERS SLOWLY AFTER BEING NEAR DEATH'S DOOR"

Yes, how the last hundred years had flown! In all eternity, St. Peter had admitted only one discontented soul through the gates of Paradise. He nodded his very saintly head again, and licking his saintly thumb, he turned back the heavenly pages of the Book of Eternity. Then, picking up his heavenly pen and dipping it into the heavenly ink, he wrote with a very heavenly hand, and blotted it with a very heavenly blotter. Next, smiling a very heavenly smile, he turned the heavenly pages again to where he had been, to continue his endless task of admitting souls through the gates of Paradise.

ONCE AN AMERICAN

By GUY KROFT

"ATTA BOY, WILKINSON!" screamed the throng of jubilant students, as they streamed on to the gridiron of Prince Edward stadium. Shouts of "Swell game!" followed the retreating figure of Murray Wilkinson as he was triumphantly borne to the dressing room on the broad shoulders of his team mates. Later as the fair-haired youth who seemed to be a young version of the great Grecian God Apollo, left the stadium, he was surrounded by a mass of joyous friends. But this was nothing unusual for him, for as long as any of his companions could remember, Murray had been the centre of attention wherever he went.

Just a few weeks under twenty years ago Mathew Wilkinson had rushed breathlessly from the offices of "Wilkinson & Katz, Barristers," to be by the side of his wife who had just given birth to a much-longed for son. With fondest hopes they named the child Murray, in memory of an ancestor of unusual stature and intelligence who had gained fame during the revolutionary war of 1776, a struggle that had led to the formation of a country of freedom and tolerance, and if the "oohs and ohs" of doting nurses and the words of praise by the doctor meant anything, the child was indeed destined to be a source of pride to his parents.

Mr. Wilkinson began to make plans for his son right from the beginning. This boy of his was going to have the best of everything—of homes, of schools, of friends. He would take him on hunting trips, teach him to play football, baseball, and hockey. Yes sir! His son was going to be a real boy! Above all, however, he was going to be honest, fair, and tolerant. As a lawyer, meeting the public as he did, Mr. Wilkinson was able to see all too clearly the presence of unfounded prejudices. His Murray would not be one of those who jeered a fellow because his skin was a different color, or his nose was a different shape from his own. Then Mat Wilkinson would say dreamily to his wife, "Some day I will be appointed to the bench, maybe even the Supreme Court, but they won't forget about the Wilkinson in the firm. No; by that time our son will be in there, following in his father's footsteps."

As time passed, young Murray Wilkinson began to fulfil his father's most cherished dreams. At five he was out playing baseball with friends twice his age. When he was in grade three, he played on school teams with grade sixes. Although he continued to show this amazing skill in athletics, he became equally proficient in his academic work, and when it came to awarding the medal to the outstanding student in his graduating class, there was no need to look past Murray.

In keeping with this story-book perfection, Murray was a friend to everyone. As if purposely to please his Dad, he numbered "Snowball" Perkins, a perpetually good-humored Negro, and Manny Shulman, a Jewish kid from across the street, among his closest associates. And why not? "They're a couple of good guys," he reasoned, "and darned good football players too!"

It was one of the red-letter days of Mr. Wilkinson's life when, a few weeks after graduation, his son made clear his intentions to study law. "Yes," Mr. Wilkinson said to his wife, for perhaps the thousandth time in eighteen years, "there will soon be another Wilkinson in the firm."

Once more Murray's father made sure that his son would have the best. Arrangements were made for his enrollment in Prince Edward College, one of the most exclusive and highly thought of schools in the country. Murray had to leave his friends and family behind, but his ability to work hard, and his winning personality went with him to Prince Edward. Soon he was near the top of class his class, quarterback on the football team, and generally considered to be the most popular person in the freshman class. This well-deserved success closely followed him through his sophomore and third years, until now, on the eve of his return home, with only a year at Harvard before he could write A.B. after his name, Murray was the hero of the school. Mat Wilkinson's dream of his son being a real boy had been answered.

The boy that the Wilkinsons welcomed home seemed, but for added maturity, the same one that had left them three years previously. There was, however, a change. Mrs. Wilkinson was the first to become aware of it. Several days after his return, she chanced to hear Murray tell Snowball to stay away from him because a person in the position he would soon have, could not afford to be seen with colored people. Sad as she was, Mrs. Wilkinson refrained from telling her husband. But, he was soon to discover the change for himself. A few evenings later he chanced to say, "Well, it looks as if I'm going to get my position on the Bench. Couldn't happen at a better time either; another year and you'll be ready to step into your father's boots."

To a startled father, Murray replied, "No, I'm afraid not, Dad. I will never go into 'Wilkinson & Katz.' You see, I could never be a partner to a Jew."

Prince Edward College had taught Murray many things necessary to becoming a good citizen, but the exclusiveness of the school, the fraternities, and all their associate organizations, had taught him something else—to look down on minority racial and religious groups.

Disappointed as he was, Mr. Wilkinson, rather than make an issue of the affair, suggested that Murray tour the peaceful Europe of 1937, hoping that the boy would forget his intolerant views. Murray made the trip and found there much of interest, especially the people and their governments. From his son's letters, Mat Wilkinson became convinced that the boy of old would return and go on with his original plans.

Murray travelled from country to country until he came to Germany. Here he became engrossed in Nazism, and the idea of a race of supermen, and little wonder it was, for he had what this new doctrine preached, a contempt for those nationalities considered to be inferior to one's own. With one heartless letter, he shattered his father's hopes. He told of his interest in Nazism, and of his intention to remain in Germany. That was his last word

EPISODE

By DAVID MCINTOSH

THE CLOCK on the bank's tower dolefully struck the hour of twelve. The night was heavy and close, and only occasionally the moon managed to struggle through the slowly moving clouds. The street was deserted except for shadows which seldom drifted past the restaurant window. Margy was just finishing the night shift. Because she was thoroughly absorbed in the process of shining the various glasses and carefully arranging them in order of size on the shelf behind her, she did not notice one of the shadows, which was skulking across the window, darken against the door. It was not until the door chimed that she was aware of the customer.

When she whirled around, she saw a fat figure of a man come sauntering across to the counter. He was laboriously breathing as if his weight was quite a strain on his lungs. With what seemed to be a painstaking effort, he hoisted himself on to one of the stools, which creaked and moaned under his weight. Margy looked at him through one eye, loath to accept a customer at closing time.

"What'll it be?" she drawled, thinking of the dishes a man of his pattern was going to require.

"Well, now," he mumbled back, "strong coffee and a banana split should do it."

"This stuff's been boiling for almost two hours," Margy returned, as she drew a steaming cupful from a large shining urn. As she carelessly shoved it in front of his face, she continued, "That ought to be strong enough."

"Yeah," he bawled, "but I'd rather drink it all from the cup than the saucer." He shrivelled up his nose and sniffed.

"Cold outside?" asked Margy as her adept fingers carelessly, but quickly, scooped out the ice cream, sliced the bananas, threw them into a dish, and sullenly slid the concoction across the counter.

After it was engulfed in his chubby fingers, Margy began her work at the far end of the counter, casting guarded, disgusted glances at the sprawled-out form. Then she noticed that the customer had touched neither his coffee nor his 'split.' "Well, I can't say his eyes are bigger'n his stomach," she mused. She kept on dusting between the objects on the counter. "At least he's a silent eater," she thought, for a strange silence prevailed. Even the whir of the electric clock on the wall could be heard. But when she peeped at him again, he still was not eating.

As she looked at this man again, she realized his sinister appearance. His hat was pulled far down over his eyes so that his whole face was in shadow. All but his wide, leering mouth and large pugnacious nose was in darkness.

Then Margy's mind began to wander, as minds will on dark dreary nights in deserted restaurants. Terrible incidents had often happened before in situations such as these. Her mind changed from sarcastic thoughts to more frightening ones. Her heart beat wildly as she supposed that his shaded eyes were intent on her every move. Pretending to be absorbed in dusting the cabinets which lined the counter, Margy thought carefully for a few seconds. Another glance revealed the same sight as before; the customer had still not touched his order. "I'll bet," she said to herself, "that he ordered the stuff just to stall for time and at the right moment he'll stage a stickup. Creeps! I'll bet he has a gun in his pocket."

The girl now turned panicky. No one would be near to help her at this hour. Probably no one could be near enough to hear her screams, not that Margy was not a loud screamer. Mike, the proprietor, had left early. She was alone, alone with this burglar. She peeped again at the slouched form. "He still hasn't touched his 'split,'" she murmured. There were only a few dollars in the cash register, but possibly he might shoot her anyway. Once more she stooped behind the counter, but this time she grasped a rolling pin. She was desperate. She looked at the customer to confirm her suspicions. He beckoned! What should she do? She would face him!

Closer she stumbled, her face flushed. She was ready with the rolling pin, when he started to pull his hand from the pocket which she thought contained the gun. She was about to let fly the rolling pin when—— home. On mailing the letter, he changed his name to Alfred Kruger and began to work for the party in its plans to destroy the free world. With America's entrance into the war, he began broadcasts similar to those of Tokyo Rose, telling his "fellow Americans" to give up the fight. During all this treacherous work, not once did his forsaken parents know of his whereabouts.

"I know I'm here late, and you don't like to be disturbed," he whined, "but isn't every customer entitled to a spoon?"

Finally, however, Nazism and its forces were downed, and in marched the victorious "fellow Americans" of Murray Wilkinson, alias Albert Kruger. He was charged with treason and deported to the homeland he had betrayed, to be tried by the people he had betrayed.

After a long nerve-wracking trial, Murray Wilkinson, who had, fewer than ten years previously, been a perfect specimen of American youth, was found by a jury of "fellow Americans" to be guilty. Gazing at the judge with a pleading look, Murray rose to hear his sentence.

For a moment their eyes met; then hastily looking away the judge said in an even voice, "Since you have been found guilty of treason, I sentence you to life imprisonment."

While all present watched the condemned man leave the court, anguish was in the heart of Judge Wilkinson. Murray would never follow in his father's footsteps.

LAST DAY

By ANN STEPHENSON

I STOOD at the top of the long flight of log steps which plunged down the bank and through the cool depths of the evergreen forest. Today was my last day, yet I still could not believe that time had flown so quickly. Well, if I had only twenty-four hours left, I was going to do something to look back on, which I could call up when I longed for this place in years to come.

As if some electrical energy had released me, I plunged down the steps which led to the lake. I could not see the lake, as the pines hid it, nor could I visualize how it would look, for every morning that I had come down here, it was completely changed. Some days, the wind whipped it into churning, angry, white-capped waves, and like the sea, its color varied in patches from a soft-hued green to a dark deep blue. On other mornings, it was as quiet and serene as the hot morning. I thought of this as I raced down the long flight of steps. Reaching the bottom, I padded softly along the narrow needle-covered path which ran parallel to the lake, through a clump of bushes, and there I was. Quite unexpectedly, the lake flashed into view. I could remember the first time I had come upon the lake, and the feeling I had experienced. Why, it seemed as though quite by accident I had discovered this perfect little gem, sparkling and dancing in the sunlight, and today I felt that old feeling invade my soul once again, for there before me lay the lake as I had never before beheld it. It was so smooth and still that the whole world seemed to hold its breath with me. A mist, so fine that it seemed one tiny breeze would send it rising, hung over the far shoreline. The intense blue depth of the water seemed as limitless as the wondrous blue sky it lay under. I stood transfixed and breathless as I stared at this scene before me, this scene which seemed almost as though God had created it for me alone.

Then, something snapped me out of the daze. I must hurry! There was not much time left! I walked to the clump of bushes where my gleaming canoe lay hidden, turned it right side up, and shoved it into the water. I had a considerable distance to paddle along the shoreline. Through many languid summer months I had guided my canoe along this route many times, and I knew every tree and rock along the way. Old Bill would be expecting me, because this was my last day. I had discovered Bill one day a few years ago, quite unexpectedly, and I could still remember Rex, his husky police dog, running down to the water's edge, snarling and barking, to frighten me off. Old Bill was a retired trapper who lived in a comfortable log cabin all year round. For anyone else it would have been such a lonely existence, but Bill would have it no other way. Bill seemed to know when anything was bothering me, and I was compelled to confide in him.

Before I knew it, I had arrived near Bill's cabin. Yes, there was the old gnarled pine tree, whose branches were stripped of their needles, but which was still standing tall above its brothers. There too, was the flat-topped massive grey rock at the water's edge, with a solemn, blinking frog sunning himself on it. At last, there was Rex barking his welcome to me, and announcing to old Bill my arrival. Quickly I slid the canoe up on the sand and ran towards the cabin. Old Bill and I talked of many things that day. He told me of the old days when he was a trapper, stories which never ceased to delight me. We remembered the years I had known Bill, and I was sad to think that when spring came once again to this little northern lake, I would not come with it. Oh, perhaps in the future I would come again, but this thought did not comfort me. All that day I spent with my two friends and at last when the sun began to sink in the western sky, Old Bill and Rex came down to the water's edge to say good-bye. Affectionately I patted the noble old dog, and said my last good-byes to the old man. Tears were blinding my eyes as I shoved my canoe from the shore.

I had wanted something to remember, at the start of this day, and I had found it. For my life had been enriched by my experiences here. Mechanically I paddled out a little way, and turned to wave at the old man and his dog, seeing them silhouetted against the pine trees in the fading light. Resolutely I turned my back, and not looking back, I paddled off into the gathering dusk.

THE RED RIVER

By FRANK ROY

NEARLY everyone in this fair city, indeed, in the whole of southern Manitoba, has had some connection, either intimate or otherwise, with the murky, rising waters of the old Red River. As a result, there has been a bumper crop of stories, myths, and fables which originated with the flood of 1950 and which will be handed down to eager generations of children and grandchildren for a long time to come. And now half through sense of duty and half through necessity, I pass this little anecdote on to you, so that you may smile or weep as you see fit.

From the station platform in the town of Morris in the province of Manitoba, one looks south down the Canadian National Railway line to see the town of St. Jean Baptiste about five miles off. To the left, about one mile from the railway embankment, winds the peaceful Red River wending its quiet way towards the sea. The countryside around is low and flat with the railway embankment standing on the average perhaps ten feet above the natural ground level.

It was on this station platform and on this stretch of track that our story takes place. It was about five o'clock in the afternoon on a day in May, 1950. The last rescue train had pulled out of Morris and was slowly making its way, through three or four feet of rushing water, towards Winnipeg. A small group of men, railroaders and farmers, were seated on the station platform planning to make one last stand against the rising flood waters. As twilight came on, they chanced to look out towards St. Jean where, much to their surprise, they beheld the lonely figure of a man up to his hips in water, and feeling his way along the top of the railway embankment by means of a pole about ten feet in length. The raging waters sweeping on every side of him were so cold and swift that he would never have stood a chance if he had stepped off, or was swept off the narrow path along the top of the embankment. Apparently he was a farmer making his way to market to sell his produce. The group on the station platform were amazed to see how stupid people could be, and since the majority were railroaders, it was decided to leave this poor farmer to his fate. For about half an hour they watched the fellow feel along with his stick like a blind man, about a mile from their dry seats. Then, to their horror, as they watched, the man slipped up to his chest, apparently having stepped in an unseen hole. Immediately the man fumbled in the bag which hung just above the water under his chin and whipped out a red signal fuse which he instantly lit and began to wave, frantically, above his head. In the gloom of the on-coming night, it was a signal to behold.

"My God," shouted a watcher, "it's a railroader!" And immediately two of the trackmen jumped into a rowboat tied to the platform, and began to pull towards the red light in the distance. Three quarters of an hour later, the rescued and the rescuers were seated around the table in the station having a cup of tea (which the fellow had in his bag) to brace them up a bit.

This story particularly amuses me because the fellow was my father.

JERUSALEM

By TANNIS POWELL

WHEN I think of this City of Cities, what must be the thousand and one thoughts that overwhelm me? Is it that this place has been hallowed by the voices of six thousand years? Or that there is here the heart and brain of the State of Israel and, in the larger sense, of Israel throughout the world? Or that here is a city which recently withstood one of the world's cruellest sieges?

Approaching from Fil Avis, the splendid, dazzling picture of the city comes at a turn of the road—not all the city, but enough to see the building outlines and the mirage-like appearance of the whole. At first I drive through a lovely residential district, the Nehavia quarter, where the neat stone houses are made attractive by the trees, gardens, and plants. Here there is little wealth, but no poverty.

Now into the business section! "Business section in Jerusalem?" I heard some sceptic cry out. Well, why not? This may be a holy city but people have to earn a living also. So I go on to Zion Square, which is frankly no different from any other square, block upon block of shops—clothing, food, souvenirs, and above all, books. Many of the new immigrants rent a hole in the wall and become booksellers.

The main streets are smooth and well paved as in most cities of one hundred and fifty thousand people. The apartment houses are beautiful, glittering white in the sun, with balconies which command a panoramic view. Ben Yihuds Street shows signs of scandalous destruction. A complete city block turned into a mass of rubble and twisted steel sent a shudder through me.

Evenings in Jerusalem are cool, for, set high up in the hills like an up-raised chalice, the city basks in the breezes.

Gradually the city is widening itself so that the numerous suburbs are taking on a great importance. Only in one direction is there no expansion, where the Old City joins the New. This partition of Jerusalem is one of the tragedies of war. Standing on top of a roof, I see the wall that divides the city into two, and I watch Arab buses go from Old Jerusalem towards Bethlehem. To think that inside the Old City is the Wailing Wall, remnant from the Temple and, throughout the centuries, the symbol of Jewish hope. Yet today no Jew may enter the City of King David, nor stand with bowed head beside the Wailing Wall where for generations he has mourned the lost glories of Israel. Neither may he freely enter the Hebrew University on Mount Scopus. Thus is it any wonder then, that a trip to Jerusalem has a sobering and saddening effect on one?

As I leave the city, I repeat to myself the famous words of Hergh, the founder of Zionism:

"Truly Jerusalem is the heart of Israel, the spiritual centre for Jews and Christians alike. So let us all realize the importance of keeping her in peace."

"MY DIANE"

By JACK DEMPSEY

I thought that I could lend my heart
To you for just a while,
To the sweet enchantments of your touch
And your slow sweet smile.

But when I tried to take it back
I found to my surprise
That you could hold it oh so fast
With nothing but your eyes.

SONG OF THE WANDERER

By VERA VAN IDERSTINE

Theirs be the cities
Walled in by night,
Guarded by day;
Mine be the fields
Free to the stranger
Passing that way.
Theirs be the monarchs
Seated enthroned,
Ruling by sword;
Mine be the freedom
Servant to none;
Nature my lord.
Theirs be the houses
Built to protect
Men from all harm;
Mine be the shelter
Close in the wood or
Friendlier farm.
Theirs be the music,
Concerts in halls,
Bands on the street;
Mine be the songs of
Birds in the glen,
Wind in the wheat.
Theirs be the clinging
Traditions of old
Village and home;
Mine be rebellion!
Throw off the chains!
Leave me to roam!
Theirs be the envy,
Longing for life
Free such as mine;
Mine be contentment;
Wandering afar
From living so fine.

ESCAPE

By RALPH ADDISON

Oft have I thought that I would like to be Alone, a solitary figure, there
In the wilds of nature, on the shores of a sea,
Apart from worldly trouble; without care.
Yet even there chaotic cries are heard;
A droning sigh, the foghorn of a steamer,
The scream of a hawk pursuing a weaker bird—
These sounds awake the most peaceful dreamer.
Even the remotest region is lost
To progress. The soft whispering of rain
On the powerful wrath of storm-tossed
Sea is dwarfed by the roar of a passing plane.
And like a beam of light shatt'ring the cope
Of darkness, surrender follows escape.

WHY I AM LATE

By DILLY CAMPBELL

My mother didn't call me,
And my clock-bell didn't ring,
The morning was so dreary
That the budgie wouldn't sing.
I had to mend a stocking,
And write this little rhyme
The radio had blown a fuse
And wouldn't tell the time.

The milk was frozen solid
And the toaster wouldn't work
The Hydro bill was overdue,
So the coffee wouldn't perk.
The business folk were going,
The buses barely crept;
But, teacher, if you want the truth,
I really overslept.

BEAUTY

By TANNIS POWELL

They say that beauty is everywhere.
Even in the ugliest corners of the earth;
That every slum has its tree,
And every wasteland its bloom.
That a man with a sense of beauty,
A poetic soul and sharp eyes,
Will find loveliness wherever he goes.
This is truth yet mockery,
For to see beauty alone and not the overwhelming counterpart
Is a false and negative approach to life.

THE LIE

By MARION CAMPBELL

So small, so frightened standing there
She was hot and tense and close to crying;
But the teacher obviously did not care,
She would not stand for any lying.
"You said it was not you I heard
When I was out there in the hall.
Was it then perhaps some bird
The others heard let out a call
To Susie in another seat?
Now please admit it; do not lie!"
She stood there looking small and sweet,
Her heart was heavy; she wished she'd die.
It was too late now to recall
What she had said in a moment's fright.
The poor wee thing, so ashamed and small;
She had within no ounce of fight.
Oh, why had she spoken; oh why had she lied
About so little a thing as that?
She looked at the floor and heavily sighed
But the teacher stood there, lips pressed flat.

She bent her head and there came a tear
She tried to hide it; no one must see.
The teacher did. "Sit down, my dear."
The small one thought, "She still likes me."

THE SQUIRREL'S PHILOSOPHY

By MARION ALLEN

Two squirrels sat on a branch of a tree.
Said Longtail to Reddy, "Humans have ever,
(At least it seems this way to me)
Thought that hunting each other was clever."

"Just what do you mean?" enquired young Reddy
To whom this grave complaint was made.
"Those little girls, Adele and Betty
All morning like little angels have played."

"They are young and extremely innocent,"
Replied the more experienced squirrel.
"If men would copy the simple spent
And peaceful days of a little girl . . .

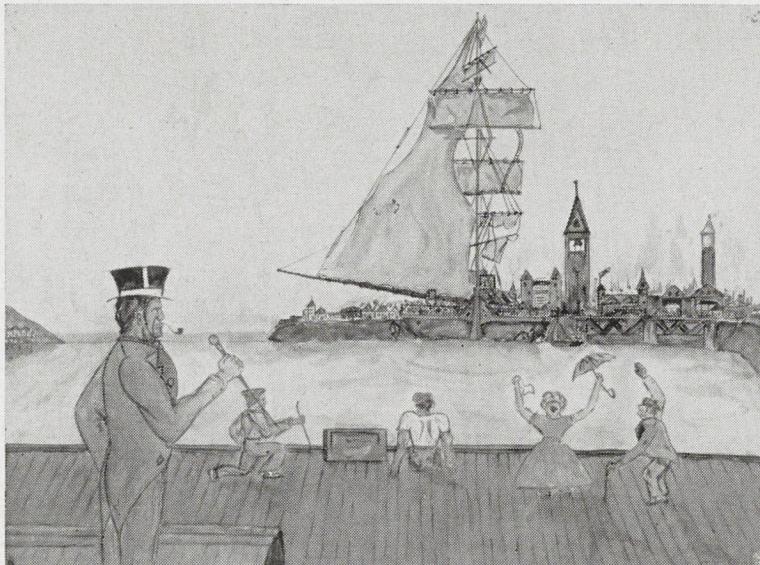

If men would cease this senseless war
For power with which no good is done
But which is only used for more
Destructive tools. Constructive? None.

If men would start to make more tools . . .
To make more implements of peace;
And if men didn't strive like simple fools
To find and capture a "Golden Fleece." . . .

If these things happen—but alas, I see
No way to get rid of this age old curse.
Wherever man goes, his eye will be
On the riches in some other man's purse."

Facts about ELECTRICITY

It gives more for your money than almost anything else you can buy. It lights your home, cooks your meals, does the house-work, launders your clothes, operates your radio — in fact, there's hardly anything that electricity cannot do quicker, easier, and better around the home. It costs so little — it does so much.

What You Should Know About Sugar

The white sugar of the household is a carbohydrate, an organic compound, containing carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, and is called in chemistry sucrose ($C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$). Sucrose occurs in many vegetables and other plants, the most important of which are the sugar cane in the tropics and the sugar beet in temperate climates. It can be manufactured in different forms, ranging from the finest crystals to tablets and cubes. Regardless of appearance, it is, as long as of the same purity, the same sucrose, and the properties are modified in physical form only.

Notwithstanding these facts the story has been built up for years that the quality of beet sugar is inferior to cane sugar, or that cane sugar is sweeter than beet sugar. This argument is entirely without factual basis, because, as said before, both white sugar from beets or cane are the same chemical compound. There are also rumors to the effect that beet sugar causes spoilage in canned goods. The bacteria which cause this spoilage are airborne and have nothing to do with beet or cane sugar. Any canned food, whether unsweetened or sweetened with any sugar will spoil if not sterilized properly.

It may also help in destroying these prejudices to mention that cane sugar has been practically unknown on the European continent since Napoleon, and only beet sugar used for all purposes without any disadvantage as to quality, sweetness or anything else.
